

Designing spaces for all - Worksheet

Part Two - Designing better systems

How do we design a better system, or improve the current one?

Good design focusses on connections between the components or elements of design rather than the components themselves. This next part of the design stage we're looking at connections and the people that you're trying to bring into this space.

Lets use an example to help our focus, we'll use the example of organising a convergence meeting, looking at the actual physical venue, the target audience and speakers and how to widen that sense of engagement for all involved.

At the same time think about your own experiences when you have been/felt alienated from spaces, perceived or actual, because it adds a lot more resonance to the work that we are doing.
